The family of a former Philadelphia police officer is upset and demanding answers after video surfaced of the teen's mom allegedly ranting against the officer. Pastor Steven Thomas Jr. posted the video of the incident, which happened on Nov. 19 at his church. Stephen also took the incident viral on his Facebook page — and it's been shared thousands of times. "She was ranting about how police are racist and stuff like that," said Samantha Fisk, who is the pastor's daughter. The Thomas family had been going to the church since Stephen was a baby. "To come in a church and you're going to be judged by people you work with," the pastor said. Samantha says Stephen's mother also showed up at the police station and demanded that they "get the cops off her son." "It's just horrible," Samantha said. Pastor Stevens says the officers just wanted to help, but it was enough to upset his son. "And I could tell that was breaking him down," Samantha said. The pastor says his son is upset and feels like he's being targeted because he's African-American. "They feel like they can do anything to him," Samantha said. The family tells Eyewitness News they want an apology from the officers. "We're glad that it got on Facebook,
