AutoCAD also supports the following types of add-on software, provided by third parties: Virtual Globes: Various globes are provided by third parties, such as SEGY, SAP, Fujifilm, SkyArc, DigitalGlobe, Google Earth, NASA, Google Maps, Agisoft Photoscan, Esri, etc. AutoCAD MapMaker: This tool is based on MapInfo. It was released with AutoCAD 2008 and supports single and multi-sheet projects. AutoCAD LT: This is a sub-set of AutoCAD available for free download. It supports drawing packages only and is not a true CAD application. AutoCAD Map Designer: This is a proprietary plug-in provided by ESRI for AutoCAD 2009 and above. It can generate elevation data (vertical and horizontal contours, height models, hillshades, hillshades with contour lines, and isocontour lines) and base elevation. It can also generate contours from large amounts of coordinates. The output is saved in DXF, SHP, SHX, IFS, or MIF. The map cannot be saved as an AutoCAD drawing. It must first be converted to an ESRI map document, saved in a format compatible with ESRI, and then imported to AutoCAD. Regional products: AutoCAD allows the user to save a project for a specific region. This tool is not intended for use with free or trial versions of AutoCAD. OpenNI is an interface that provides control of many of AutoCAD's interaction functions by way of a natural-language-based user interface. It was released with AutoCAD 2011. AutoCAD for Mac OS X is available from the Mac App Store. After AutoCAD 2011 was released, several competing CAD applications, such as Rhino, were released that have a similar interface. As of 2015, software such as Rhino and SolidWorks have similar capabilities to AutoCAD's modeling and mechanical capabilities. Other CAD software Another possibility is to use the Linux ca3bfb1094
