Heresy Rules

Anti Hack Modifications

All of the main rules apply. Players modify the hero's abilities. This is to prevent simple cheats or exploits but to also make each playthrough an utterly unique experience. Players first design a load of abilities and then fine tune them for each unique playthrough. The ability abilities are only changed by the player characters so the player can still share experience on the fly as in a DMG game.

True Random Results

Before we start the players choose the configuration of their computer. Randomness rules! The players then choose their characters, the majority will start with a hand of exactly the same character choices during character creation. The only difference being that most of them will start with different Backstories.

How To Play

Will Save - After character creation and both players have chosen their characters we'll roll everything, keeping track of each players' movement along the way. These rolls are then played out by the players themselves.

Charts - A spreadsheet will be presented to the players with the complete results of all of the rolls. It will list all of the moves followed by the outcomes. It will also allow players to track their performance over the course of each session thus avoiding any irritation caused by "natural" randomness.

Passive - After all of the rolls, any extra points from passive abilities and the advantages gained from game selection will be added to a few passive stats. These stats are then used to determine your starting ability output.

Moving

Keep moving along the chart. Initiative matters but it is neither the only nor the best method. If players are getting confused by initiative or find themselves in a situation where chosing the best time to move would give them advantages over the opponent(s), play a long series of moves and count the opportunities to roll over the two or three turns. This might

The game was designed by Hassei-san (the original creator of GIP) for his own game. He made a game using the sample tilemap data for Pixel Game Maker, but he decided to create it himself because he wanted to make something that he made himself, and not something someone else made. The game was made at around the same time as the tilemap editor. The game also includes a strategy part of how to beat the game. Trying to beat the game without reading the strategy section will leave you lost. The trial version has the tilemap with 12 levels for single-player, and both players have an additional 32 levels for the puzzle. If you experience any troubles, please refer to the information below, or if you don't have anything wrong and your game won't open, please give us your feedback at pixelgm.vsu.ac.jp There are many tiles in the editor. Press [TL] and [TR] buttons to switch them on the map. If you can't understand any of the tutorials in the game, please refer to these tutorials in the list of tutorials by clicking on the button on the bottom-left corner of the editor. The map is designed to be "long" and "narrow", and can fit in the space below the map of almost any game in the editor. Because the tilemap is also designed to fit the space below the map in many games, you can make the editor tilemap have the same tilemap layout as that of the game you're playing with it. In the final game, you have to find a way to get to the end of the level. Usually, you can get there in a very straight line, but sometimes there may be a part of the level where you can't reach the end point without going back and forth. Please refer to the information below when playing the game. GAME BUGS - Tilemaps with many shapes cannot be converted. - Tilemaps with large shapes such as the ones with a height of 3 or 4 tiles, will be cut.
