I'm looking to make a SetVector function that only accepts positive integers and in which no duplicate values may be present. So far I've implemented the following: Clear[SetVector] SetVector[expr_Integer] := Sort[Tuples[IntegerDigits[expr], Infinity]] However, I'm wondering if I can redefine the function SetVector so that it does not accept IntegerDigits[expr]? A: In the interest of making this as useful as possible, here is the built-in function that works as you requested: SetVector[expr_Integer] /; Or @* MatchQ[#, Integer] := Sort[{ToExpression[#2], Sort[#2[[1]]]}] & @@

Have a Dell Power edge T2337, 256 RAM, 1 tb hard drive, 12 months old computer,.Constant-speed drives are common in industry. A constant-speed drive, as its name implies, produces a constant output speed regardless of the load on the drive. Some constant-speed drives may also include a control to adjust the speed of the drive to match a particular input speed to the drive. This is done by monitoring the input speed and adjusting the speed of the drive as necessary. While providing an effective solution to speed matching, such a system often leads to delays in time and power delivery to the load. More recently, constant-speed drives have been used in industry as peripheral devices for assisting in the repair of faulty or worn out hard drives in computers. These constant-speed drives are typically designed to be coupled to replace a malfunctioning hard drive and attach to the computer via a standard floppy disk drive connector. Such a drive, once attached to the computer, would then have to periodically sense the input speed of the computer, identify the drive speed, and adjust the drive speed to match the input speed of the computer. While allowing for high speed repair of computers, the constant-speed drive with speed matching capabilities does not allow for installation of the drive as an addition to the computer.Q: PHP curl throws error I'm trying to make curl to work with this code:

A general protocol for the palladium-free synthesis of (E)-olefins using biomolecules is described. The reaction is triggered by Diels-Alder cycloaddition between dienophiles, formed by the enzymatic decarboxylation of L-leucine or other small dipeptides, and pyrrole, an aza-Michael acceptor. An efficient cycle of consecutive pyrrole formation is catalyzed by a Mg(2+) -dependent nonenzymatic carbonyl reductase, which activates both the alpha-amino and the alpha-carboxyl groups of the dipeptide. A cascade of Michael and addition reactions leads to the final functionalization of the diene. The potential utility of these catalytic processes is demonstrated by the selective construction of (E)-olefins by semipreparative enzymatic reactions of this methodology.I am writing to invite you to a workshop on the use of participatory action research (PAR) tools with elderly care professionals in the Midlands region of England.
