KALABHAVAN MANI

NADANPATTUKAL.MR imaging of the full-field light cone of the human retina. The intrinsic, very fine and moving textures of the human retina, the neural structure that leads to the eyes being the window on the world, are difficult to image when the use of scanning laser ophthalmoscope or conventional confocal scanning laser ophthalmoscope is to be attempted. An indirect method was applied to assess the retinal light cone images acquired by means of a modification of the conventional time-gated MR imaging procedure, which was applied to a patient with retinitis pigmentosa. Retinal light cones resulting from the scanning of a 30 degrees x 30 degrees region with a linear progressive MR system were obtained. This investigation indicates that there is a conventional, purely passive, method for imaging the retinal light cone.Q: Is it possible to cut
