nandi and colleagues describe a framework for the visualization of extremely large and complex data sets arising in multi-dimensional confirmatory factor analysis. the article is part of the proceedings of the fifth international workshop on principal component analysis and related topics, ppca '98, held in the uk in october 1998, and dedicated to the achievements of prof. deborah m. harrison during her retirement from the faculty of psychology of the university of london. ppca was a congress of statisticians, mathematicians, and experimental psychologists dedicated to the study of multidimensional measurement procedures, parametric statistical inference, and the analysis of complex data sets. it was held in the uk for the first time in 1986, and has been held every two years since then. ppca '98 was the fifth congress. most of the 1319 attendees came from the united kingdom and the republic of ireland, while europe generally contributed less than expected. the congress drew more than 40 published studies, and the papers were published in special issues of many journals, including multivariate behavioral research, psychological methods, behavioral research methods, and journal of consulting and clinical psychology. one of the most interesting papers, in part because it was held at the congress, was the seminal paper by k. p. maccallum and colleagues on the subject of factorial simplicity.
