Inspired by the popular "Need for Speed: Most Wanted" racing video game released back in 2005, NFS Most Wanted Icon Pack brings users a collection of four icons for their files. The lightweight icons can be easily set up. All icons have a resolution of 32 x 32 pixels and they show various parts of cars from different angles. Aside from the icon files (ICO format), the collection includes four images with the PNG format, displaying the same pictures as their corresponding icon. These PNG images have a wider resolution, of 256 x 256 pixels. In other words, you can use them in specialized icon editing programs, such as Greenfish Icon Editor Pro, in order to create icons with a larger resolution than the ones included in the pack. Applying an icon to a file is seamlessly done, thanks to the default options provided by the operating system. All you have to do is open the Properties area of a file and select a new icon by pointing out its file path. We have not come across any technical difficulties throughout our testing, since NFS Most Wanted Icon Pack did not cause the operating system to hang, crash or display error notifications. All in all, NFS Most Wanted Icon Pack should please all fans of the well-known racing video game, since it gives them the possibility of personalizing their files. Q: What should be expected of Kubernetes's Deployment Controller? What should be expected of Kubernetes's Deployment Controller when running on production clusters? When should it be expected to do an update? When should it not be expected to do an update? A: We operate the Deployments manually. When we first deployed, we made a new Deployment: `$ kubectl create -f app/deployment.yaml` deployment "app" created deployment "app" is now the Deployment that's managed by the operator. We can monitor the Deployment from the Operator's dashboard. When we see a spike in the rate of traffic to the web app, we immediately trigger the Deployment to update the number of replicas. `$ kubectl rollout status deployment/app` Waiting for rollout to finish: 1 out of 1 new replicas are updated, current number of replicas is 1 (updated 1 old, 1 new) You can also schedule when the Deployment should be updated. The manual trigger is useful when you want to trigger the update manually, even if there's a scheduled update to it. If the Deployment controller should not update the Deployment, it should only apply to operator-managed Deployments.
