Back in May I wrote an article for which one of my cameras was used as the backing track. The feed provided by my cameras is a complex feed, and I struggled mightily to get it into yes on BlogPost. I finally got it working and was one step away from starting this review, but I really did not add much to that article. Why did I not think to write this article before realizing that the feed my camera provides was complex? Because I had not considered that there would be more than one camera connected to the computer: the one attached and the external. I still consider myself an amateur when it comes to photography, and the info found in the first part on this blog is my own subjective, personal opinion, and is not based in any way, shape, or form on facts. The second part for which I am referencing this article is based on facts and I have data to back up the information, so that part is all legit. Also, being a copyeditor, this article has been heavily proofread (read: scanned) and corrected where possible. If you see spelling or grammar errors, please let me know in the comments. At the outset of the article, I mentioned that you don't need a copy of Photoshop to use the features of Amy, the new digital asset management software released by Lightroom. That's true, but Amy isn't a photography application. She's a tool for imaging content in the Lightroom 3/4/5 interface and managing that content in a catalogue. That's why I will spend the most time in this article talking about the new features added to Lightroom.

Now that you have the base layer set up, it's time to add the text. To do so, simply start typing the text and press the "Enter" key. This will automatically insert your text into the document. You can change the text using the "Type" tool, found under the text tool in the top right-hand corner. Just like text, you also have the option of changing the color of the text. To do this, simply press the "Type" tool, and in the menu on the top right-hand corner, choose "Color" and select the color you desire. Selecting a color can make an incredible difference in graphics and overall look; something to keep in mind. To keep things in perspective, remember that the element of the picture that goes inside the page is called print. To select a print size, return the text layer back to the layer stack and you should see a little icon of a printing press sitting above the text layer. This icon will let you toggle back and forth between print sizes. Click on it and you'll see a list of sizes available to you, such as 4x6, 5x7, 8x10, etc.[10]. Look for the one you'd like to work with and click on it. To change how large the text goes, click on the "Style" on the top right-hand corner and you can choose from a variety of options, see the image below: Collaborate with friends and colleagues to transform photos into digital masterpieces. Easily retouch portraits and landscapes on the go, or simply refine videos & presentations. This is a particularly pleasing tool. When you don't have a focus in your photo. The DOF tool has a slider that lets you change the degree of blur to make the movement in your photo more prominent and interesting. You can also apply a type of lighting to your pictures, such as making them look like a studio lighting, while choosing a new point, you can change the angle. These tools have layers that let you add more depth and intensity to the picture than initially. It even allows you to get it better while leaving the individual objects unchanged. For example, if you have a wedding picture where the individual people look quite real on the photo but they are not in focus, you can ignore the parts that are not in focus and only concentrate on the best framing of the face, without affecting the other parts of the picture. If you wish for a tool that lets you add gradients, split layers (add masking), or simply to apply a certain expression to your picture. This will make it either a surreal or emotional picture. The magic of this tool is that it is not fixed. It can be changed in the future, while working, editing and providing a consistent result. With these tools, you can easily make any changes to your picture. While with the Magic Wand tool, you can change the entire picture. There is also a sliders that allows you to change the edges of the picture. Other tools allow also the adjustment of various parts, such as the iris, eyes, nose, and much more. They allow Photoshop users to create their own products, from websites to presentations, to any other format. Here are all the tools and features that Photoshop CC allows you to create logos, templates, buttons, backgrounds, and other graphic products. These are developed in Adobe Lightroom, but you can also use the same tools in Photoshop.
